Friends of NRA and The NRA Foundation recognize that the future of our shooting traditions lies in programs that inspire and encourage individuals to further develop their passion for firearm education and training. Recognizing America's younger generations represent the future of the shooting sports, State Fund Committees frequently allocate more than 80% of grant monies to youth programs.

Eddie Eagle GunSafe® teaches children the important steps to take if they find a gun, while Refuse to Be A Victim® teaches people of all ages the importance of being alert to imminent danger, equipping participants with life-saving knowledge. The annual Youth Education Summit trains high schoolers to continue the shooting legacy by intelligently debating their Constitutional rights, while programs designed specifically for military and law enforcement enhance the marksmanship skills. Women on Target® helps women gain confidence in their firearm skills. Disabled veterans are given opportunities to continue shooting through programs like the Paralyzed Veterans of America's National Trapshoot Circuit, and young hunters throughout the nation are inspired by the Youth Hunter Education Challenge. Hundreds of indoor and outdoor ranges have been built or repaired by NRA range grants, and then frequented by students learning marksmanship in JROTC, Boy Scouts, and 4-H.
